CANCER Answerline
American Cancer Society

A regular feature, prepared by the American Cancer Society, to help save your life from cancer.

An army colonel writes: "My brother, a lifelong cigarette smoker, died last year of lung cancer, and now his 12-year-old son is smoking! I can handle my nephew, but I think that the time has come when the public has to speak out about the cigarette industry and demand change."

ANSWERline: Anyone who wishes to "speak out" will have a chance in the spring of 1977 when the American Cancer Society will hold regional forums in eight cities in which a panel of experts will hear testimony from the public. Civic leaders, parents, scientists, educators, physicians, cancer patients, and members of their families will be welcome to "speak out." A wide variety of topics will be aired, including cigarette sales to minors, Federal support for tv anti-smoking "commercials" and an employee's right to a smoke-free workplace. Ask your local American Cancer Society Unit where the regional forum nearest your hometown will take place. Advance registration is necessary if you wish to address the panel. When all eight forums have been completed, the panel will summarize and voice a public mandate for action on the smoking and health issue.

A kindergarten teacher writes: "A boy in my class has been treated for cancer, and now the mother of a classmate wants to transfer her son to another school. She is afraid he will catch cancer. Is there any possibility of that?"

ANSWERline: Absolutely not! Cancer is not a contagious disease. This woman's mistaken attitude can hurt the child with cancer and possibly deprive her own son of a chance to have a valuable friend. Please try to persuade her to speak with her son's pediatrician, or her family physician, or people at your local American Cancer Society Unit for added assurance that cancer is most definitely not "catching."

A railroad employee explains: "I have read that there is a simple new test for bowel cancer. What is it?"

ANSWERline: The test is called a do-it-yourself guaiac test, and it involves the placing of three consecutive stool samples on specially-treated paper slides. When the slides are returned to your physician or clinic, they are tested for traces of hidden blood, which might indicate the presence of unsuspected cancer. This is very important because bowel cancer is highly curable when diagnosed and treated early. The do-it-yourself guaiac test is an important aid to early detection, particularly when it is used in combination with a physical examination and a "procto" which is an examination of the bowel with a slim lighted tube. These three steps - guaiac test, physical checkup and a procto are important for people over 40, those most likely to develop bowel cancer. Ask your physician or your local American Cancer Society Unit about the availability of this new test.
